A new report today from The Sydney Morning Herald offers an interesting look at how Apple's "Find My" app was used in a deadly police chase last month.. More information on the NYPD's new app can be found in the full article from New York Times.. Rather than writing out notes, officers will type their notes into the app, and the notes will then be sent to a department database.

NYPD Deputy Chief Anthony Tasso told The New York Times that the digital system will allow for entries to be used as valuable crime fighting data.. Entries into the digital app include location information and time entered by officers, and the data is accessible in real time, which has raised some concerns about more oversight, but the entry process will be streamlined and the process will cut down on paper waste.. The NYPD has been providing officers with smartphones since 2015, and there are now 37,000 iPhones in use.. Alert friends to emergency broadcast streams in real time with text messages Police scanner 2 also allows users to record interesting events and save them to replay later.
